The graduate programs at Loyola University Maryland embrace excellence and social responsibility in the workplace and community. Graduate programs at Loyola are designed for students at any stage of their professional journey, and are offered across three schools: Loyola College of Arts & Sciences, the School of Education, and the Sellinger School of Business & Management. Learn more about how you can apply your skills to greater intellectual and experiential challenges. Featured below are select Loyola programs that may be of interest to students considering graduate programs upon graduation:

BUSINESS

Emerging Leaders MBA

A one year, full-time MBA targeting recent graduates or early career professionals. The program offers a lockstep curriculum that features internships, consulting projects, domestic and international field studies, business plan development, and other experiential learning elements.

Master of Accounting (MAcc)

A full time, 12-month program designed for those with an accounting undergraduate degree or equivalent accounting coursework. This program allows an undergraduate degree holder to achieve the 150 hours required for licensure.

ARTS & SCIENCES

M.A. Emerging Media

A 33-credit online program focusing on new and emerging communication trends and technologies that is designed to be completed in 12 months for full-time students or up to 42 months for part-time students.

M.A. in Liberal Studies

A 36-credit program that can be completed full- or part-time and seeks students with a broad spectrum of interests who desire to further their education by engaging in an intellectual dialogue with professors—particularly around the American experience (in literature, business, economics, the arts, politics, philosophy, science, etc.)

M.S. in Psychology

The Masters’ programs in Psychology prepare students to begin employment in psychology under the supervision of a doctoral-level licensed psychologist or to continue their education leading to the Licensed Clinical Professional Counselor (LCPC) or a doctoral degree (Psy.D. or Ph.D.).

M.S. in Speech Pathology/Post-bacc in Speech Pathology

The graduate program in speech-language pathology provides education and training to enable students to become skilled and caring professionals who will lead and serve in a diverse and changing world. The major purpose of this two-year (five semesters), full-time program is education and development of superior professionals for careers as speech-language pathologists. The master's program in speech-language pathology is accredited by the Council on Academic Accreditation of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association (ASHA). The Speech-Language Pathology department also offers post-baccalaureate coursework for students with an undergraduate degree in an area other than communication disorders who wish to complete some or all of the prerequisite courses necessary for admission into many master's programs in speech-language pathology.

Master of Theological Studies

A full-time program designed to give students both a broad exposure to the Christian tradition and a variety of theological specialties and to allow students to explore a topic in depth through the preparation of a thesis. The MTS can be excellent preparation for beginning a Ph.D. or it can lead into further work in other fields such as library science, social work, law, or publishing.
TEACHING & EDUCATION

Master of Arts in Teaching

A program that provides initial teacher certification in elementary or certain secondary areas and is designed to prepare exceptionally qualified teachers who are responsive to the needs of diverse learners. Offered for both full- and part-time enrollment, the MAT program offers a rich integration of coursework, internship experience, and individualized attention.

M.Ed. in Montessori Education

Here at Loyola, you can earn your Master of Education (M.Ed.) degree in Montessori Education and an internationally-recognized AMI diploma in as little as 12-14 months. There is a great need for highly qualified Montessori teachers worldwide, and many Loyola graduates find work right after graduation, providing Montessori education in countries throughout the world. Students select one area in which to concentrate their degree: primary (ages 3-6) or elementary (ages 6-12).

M.Ed. in School Counseling

Loyola's 48-credit graduate program in school counseling prepares students to effective serve and lead in pre K-12 settings. Students can choose among an M.A., an M.Ed., and a Certificate of Advanced Study. The M.Ed. program, which includes six elective credits in lieu of a thesis, is approved by both the Council for Accreditation of Counseling and Related Education Programs (CACREP) and the Maryland State Department of Education (MSDE).

M.Ed. in Special Education

Loyola's certification and master's degree programs in special education are nationally recognized, and meet the professional development needs of new career entrants as well as advanced career professionals. Currently, graduate students can choose from two program concentrations, elementary and middle school special education (grades 1-8) or secondary special education (grades 6-12). Applicants who have not yet completed the required program prerequisite skills may be accepted into the program but will need to take the appropriate courses (or complete the appropriate experiences) before beginning program coursework.
