FALL 2012 COURSE HIGHLIGHTS

AH 351 / HS 351 American Urban Culture: A Tale of Four Cities

Profs. Janet Headley and Jack Breihan • TTH 10:50-12:05

During the late eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, four American cities—Baltimore, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia—competed to establish exemplary cultural institutions that would be emulated (and envied) by other cities. This course considers these institutions, which include religious edifices, monuments, parks, museums and libraries, and department stores.

HS 345D.01 The Peoples of Early America

Prof. Matthew Mulcahy • TTH 9:25-10:40am (.01); TTH 10:50-12:05pm (.02)

This course explores how encounters, conflicts, and compromises between Europeans, Africans, and Native Americans in America's early history (1550-1775) shaped the development of colonial society.

EN 203.01/02 Major American Writers: Natural and Urban Landscapes

Prof. Jean Lee Cole • MW 3-4:15 (.01); MW 4:30-5:45 (.02)

From the moment European explorers set foot on American shores, they were astounded and captivated by the land: by its beauty—and by its potential for transformation. This course attempts to answer three questions: How has America's natural landscape influenced its human occupants? How have humans, in turn, transformed the land? How has the relationship between humans and their environment inspired and shaped literary art?
