In-Text Parenthetical References

You must give credit in the text to paraphrases of words and ideas as well as to exact quotations
Three ways to cite sources in the text:

- Statements followed by the cite in parentheses.

(Exact Quote)

“... mothers who are overly strict and harshly punitive ... who strongly show their anger or disappointment with their children, are likely to impede their children’s prosocial development” (Hastings et al., 2000, p. 543).

“... mothers who are extremely strict ...may impede their children’s prosocial development (Hastings et al., 2000, Conclusion section, para.4).

(Paraphrase)

Extremely critical mothers might warp children’s social development (Hastings et al., 2000). [Note: This is not a good paraphrase. It changes just a few words.]

- Sentence includes the author(s) with the year in parentheses.

Hastings et al. (2000) found that overly strict mothers ...

- Sentence includes the author(s) and the year.

A 2000 study by Hastings et al. determined that ...

Note: For in-text cites, for three, four, or five authors, list all last names followed by commas the first time cited and only first author followed by et al. and date for subsequent cites; for six or more authors, use the abbreviation, et al., for all cites.

Cited References Format

The reference list at the end of the paper provides the information needed to locate and retrieve the source documents cited in the paper.

General notes:

- Include only sources that were used in the preparation of the paper.
- Arrange entries in alphabetical order by last name of author.
- Use a hanging indent: the first line is at the left margin; subsequent lines are indented five spaces.
- Double space all entries.
- Double space also between entries.
- Space once after all punctuation.
- Use only the initials of the authors’ first and middle names.
- Include the names of all authors, no matter how many.
- List all authors in reverse order: last name, first and middle initials.
- If two or more authors are listed, use an ampersand (&) in front of the last author.
- Use commas after authors’ names and before the ampersand.
- If no author is given, start with the title and then the date. Incorporate these into the list in proper alphabetical order, ignoring initial articles.
- Capitalize only the first words of book or article titles; capitalize all important words in the name of a journal.
- Italicize or underscore the names of books and periodicals.

Note: These examples are single-spaced to save space. In a paper, entries are double-spaced.
